Enrile pushes Senate probe of mall blast

By Gil C. Cabacungan Jr.

THE SENATE MAY CONDUCT an independent investigation of the Oct. 19 Glorietta 2 explosion despite the declaration by the Philippine National Police that case was closed after its findings showed the blast that killed 11 people was caused by a gas explosion and not a bomb.

Sen. Juan Ponce Enrile said he would follow up on the resolution he filed last year to look into the cause of the Glorietta blast after the mall's owner, Ayala Land Inc., continued to insist that it was caused by a bomb.

Enrile said he hoped the Senate would act on his resolution in order to put to rest all doubts on the deadly explosion.

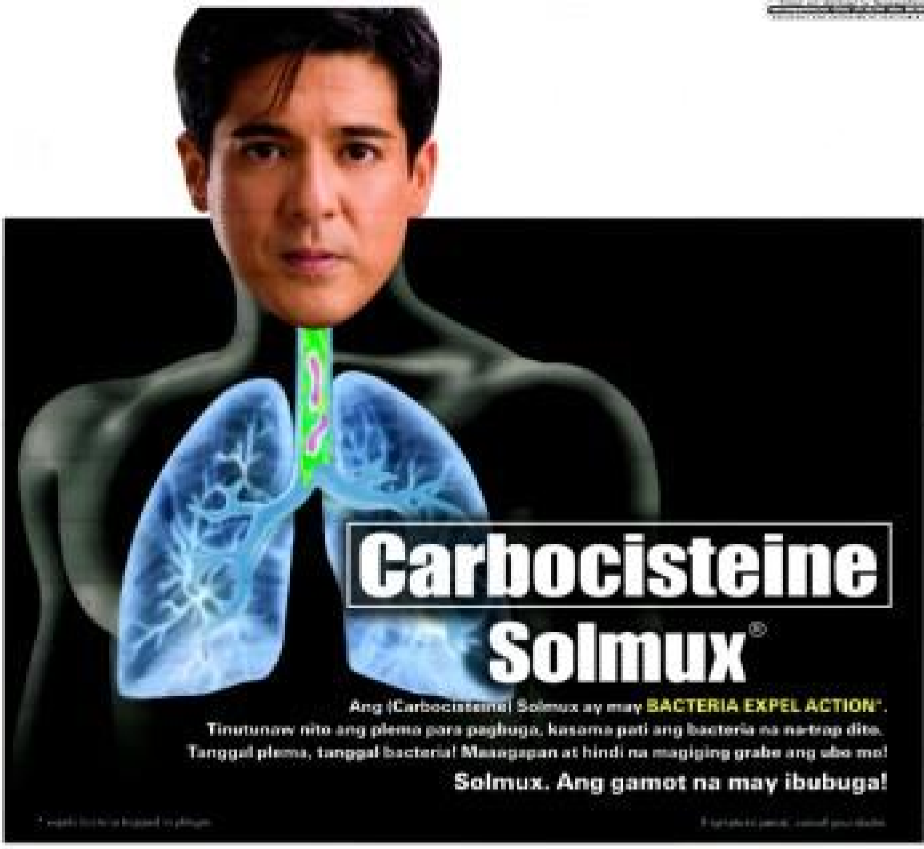

Enrile had backed the methane gas theory of the police in November, which was supported by international bomb experts, saying "the Ayalas cannot just haphazardly put the blame on anyone while saving themselves from any result. His findings of [illegible] and neglect on their part."

Enrile said in a DZMM radio interview that with the findings of the PNP the Ayala group would not be held criminally liable because the blast had been declared an accident. "There is no crime of command responsibility," he said.

Sen. Panfilo Lacson supported Enrile's call for a Senate probe, saying the "arrogant and insensitive" investigation by a multi-agency body led by the PNP [illegible] by failing to come up with conclusive findings on the real cause of the blast.

In a statement, Lacson said the PNP not only failed to explain the presence of RDX, an explosive substance, at the blast site, it also failed to apply equal justice to those who may have been responsible for the deaths and injuries caused by the tragedy.

"If the PNP thinks Glorietta is a closed case, that is not so in the eyes of the people, especially those left behind by the 11 who died and of [the 100] who were wounded. They are still crying out for justice," he said.

Gov't wants to overhaul 'sin' tax system

By Michelle V. Remo

THE DEPARTMENT of Finance wants to overhaul the system of taxing cigarettes and alcoholic beverages as the Sin Tax law of 2005 has failed to generate the expected increase in revenues.

Finance Secretary Margarito Teves agreed with criticisms that the current tax structure for so-called "sin" products was complicated and did not allow tax collection to grow commensurately with the increase in prices of cigarettes and alcohol.

"The general direction that we would like to see is one tax rate for alcohol products and one tax rate for tobacco products, with both rates indexed to inflation," Teves said in a statement.

Teves said that having only one tax rate for alcohol and another for cigarettes would simplify and enhance tax collection. Indexing the tax rates to inflation would also discourage excessive consumption of the sin products, Teves said, thus promoting better healthcare.

Under the current system, the excise tax slapped on cigarettes and alcohol vary in rates depending on the price classification. The higher the classification, the higher the tax rate.

In the case of cigarettes, there are four classifications, each slapped a different tax rate. Low-priced brands are those that cost below P5 per 20-stick pack, while mid priced are those that cost P5 to below P6.50. Higher-priced brands cost P6.50 to P10, while premium brands cost more than P10.

The tax rates rise every two years starting 2005 at varying paces. The increase was supposed to result in higher revenues for the government.

However, records from the Bureau of Internal Revenue showed that the intended increase in tax collection did not materialized.

From January to September 2007, excise tax collected from manufacturers of cigarettes and alcoholic beverages dropped 2 percent to P20.85 billion from P20.52 billion in the same period in 2006.

The slide in collection was despite the increase in the tax rates last year or two years after the first increase in 2005. The drop was accounted for by cigarettes. Collection of excise tax on alcohol increased, but it was not enough to offset the decline in the collection of excise tax on cigarettes.

Angel, Richard Pinoy kids' favorites

ANGEL LOCSIN AND RICHARD GUTIERREZ were named the most favored celebrities of Filipino kids in a survey commissioned by Cartoon Network.

The New Generations Philippines 2007 study showed that 27 percent of surveyed girls named Locsin as their preferred celebrity, with Sarah Geronimo placing second.

Among boys, 11 percent named Gutierrez as their choice, with Dennis Trillo scoring 10 as a close second.

When asked to choose between Lebron James and James Yap, 59 percent of kids chose local basketball celebrity James Yap over the NBA's Lebron James as their MVP.

The study which was done in late 2007, also revealed that kids enjoyed greater access to digital technologies and games.

The tweenies—kids 7 to 14 years old—were found to be avid digital natives, consuming media by entertainment and social networking, updated on trends and items—including computer and video games, and concerns for global warming.

The study also indicated that the growth in access to digital technologies had not affected the importance of television in kids' lives.

Cartoon Network commissioned the survey to provide insights into the minds and habits of Filipino kids in the "tweenies" age category.

It was conducted by the research company Synovate, via face-to-face, in-home interviews in Metro Manila, Cebu and Davao with a total of 1,000 kids aged 7-14, and either their mothers or their fathers.

A booster sample (300) of tweens of younger kids aged 4-6 was added to the survey to widen the scope.

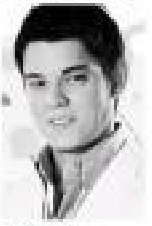

Duncan Morris, vice president of Research and Market Development at Turner International Asia Pacific, Ltd., said the survey helped them update their knowledge of Filipino kids.

Morris added: "We examined how kids' lives are being shaped by the changing digital landscape, how they accept, adapt to and live with technological advances."
